BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

Blackwood's is the leading and most popular Magazine in Great Britain. Its list of contributors includes the best writers of the world and covers all departments of interest to the general reader.

Many of the best English Novels have been first published as serials in this Magazine, and when issued in book form, have at once taken their place as the leading novels of the day; its short stories are distinguished for their freshness and originality.

Among those which have appeared more recently are:

A STIFF-NECKED GENERATION. By L. B. Walford.

THE WATERS OF HERCULES. By E. Gerard.

THE CRACK OF DOOM. By Prof. Minto.

SARACINESCA. By F. Marion Crawford.

THE MILLIONAIRE. By Louis J. Jennings, M.P.

THE LADIES LINDORES. By Mrs. Oliphant.

JOYCE. By Mrs. Oliphant.

OLD LADY MARY. By Mrs. Oliphant.

The general articles include papers in history, travel, adventure, social studies, sports, biography and poetry; a special feature being a series of translations from the German classic poets by Sir Thomas Martin.

The future of Blackwood's promises to be fully as brilliant as its past, and makes it well worthy the attention of those who would place the latest and best fiction in their libraries.

Tales have always been a leading feature of Blackwood's which has received most hearty appreciation from the public; and, in grateful recognition of this, the best energies of its conductors, from its earlier years to the present day, have been exerted in maintaining its reputation for short narratives of fiction.

Not merely from Great Britain, but from the Continent, from America, India, and the Colonies, from wherever the English language is read, a stream of stories, sketches of imagination and fancy, and brief romances steadily flow in enabling the conductors of the Magazine to gratify the taste of its readers for variety, as well as to appeal to their cultured judgment and appreciation of literary power.

Papers of TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, AND SPORT, are a special feature of Blackwood's. It has always been fortunate to number among its contributors explorers and travellers in both the OLD WORLD and the NEW, who have first communicated their adventures to the public through its pages; on the African Continent, with which public attention is so much occupied, the first detailed accounts of the explorations of BURTON, of SPEKE and GRANT, were published in Blackwood's; the adventurous wanderings of RUXTON in the backwoods and remoter regions of the NEW WORLD, then almost virgin soil to the explorer, still read as fresh as when they were penned forty years ago; and the daring hazards risked by FREDERICK HARDMAN in by-nooks of Europe, during times of political turmoil, and the wanderings of LAURENCE OLIPHANT, still vie in exciting interest with THE EXPLOITS OF TRAVELLERS IN THE MOST SAVAGE AND DISTANT REGIONS from every exploring expedition that has left the British shores. From every campaign that has been carried on outside Europe during the last half-century, Blackwood's has been enriched with literary spoil.
